

Despite high rates of vaccination and what may seem like a return to normal, we are still traversing extraordinary times. The global pandemic brought to the forefront preexisting social inequalities that shaped the way in which different groups within and across nations bore the impact of the disease. An intersectional sociological analysis allows us to better understand why certain groups in various communities were and will be affected at disproportionate rates. Politics and economics are of course part of the equation, thus a good intersectional sociological analysis will include these aspects as well.

For this Assignment, read from the series of articles posted on Covid-19 and Inequalities in our Department's website at <https://www.sjuezine.com/covid-19-inequalities> and develop your intersectional sociological analysis of the crisis.

Your essay/blog can include photos, graphs, tables and/or videos/links to videos that you may find relevant to your analysis. Make sure to include at least three concepts from the chapters of this unit besides intersectionality.

Suggested length of essay/blog 800-1000 words.
